BY FRANKLIN FYLES

leader of the English playwrights, the and they have got ahead of the hindmost. Therefore the introduction Wiggs is a failure, while uncom of Pinero's "Kitty" in New York was success for the play is caused by an occasion of expectancy and equally of satisfaction. I would qualify that only by telling you that the play will not please people who wish to have their stage heroes and heroines altogether good and their villains altogether evil, who have no liking for fiction that chims with the realities of tion that chimes with the realities of life, and who are vexed when theatri-cal stories end unhappily, as they often to out in the unideal world.

Pinero's Letty Shell is a refined working girl with a vivacious but not vicious desire for pleasure. Nevil Lechmere is an idler whose family name might well be Lechery, for it is, as he says, rotten to the core, and only one member of it, his sister, lives decent-Letty thinks that Nevil will marry and is heartbroken when she finds that he has an estranged wife, Nevil denounces rage and describes her infamy so graphically that Letty, thus made to aprehend her own similar case, flies the nick of time and saves herself. the gist of this new and pow

What happens after that? Well, in an epilogue—as the author calls the fifth act—timed several years after the single day in which all the previous things have happened, Letty is shown as the wife of a photographer whom she used to laugh at for his eccentric ugliness, the mother of his child and a worker in his shop, disappointed, disillusionized, yet contented and even happy in the contemplation of a humdrum, respectable, utterly unromantic future. As to Nevil, he has developed consumption, and, after listening and assenting to her sensible summing up of the affair, starts off to die more slowly in the pure air of the Alps than he would if he stayed in the fog of London. Isn't that an odd way to point the moral of a social problem course, there are many Pinero particulars to vivify the story. ize the characters, and make the composition good literature adaptable to stage use. Nevil and Letty are no more faithful studies in human nature and conduct than their nine associates present; and, although a Frohman star actor, William Faversham, is duly exploited to his advantage, no member of the able company lacks opportunity for distinction. "Letty" is a drama that will not fade soon from the memory of those who are impressed while seeing it. They will forget slowly, if ever, the poor little girl who longed for the joys of life, deserved them, expected them, barely escaped disaster in seeking them, and found a safe yet sad refuge in loveless matrimony. Her case is so common that most of us have seen many like it, and Pinero presents it with a subtle realism that makes us dampen our

Interestingly curious is the evolution of the newest comic opera, "A Madcap Princess," whether considered venture in the show business or as an experiment in dramatic art. First among its factors is Lulu Glaser. She began in Francis Wilson's chorus, prorward as his principal soubrette and burgeoned out into such affluence of audacity that there was hardly room for her and Wilson at once on the that some folks applauded her, while others would have used their hands to spank her if etiquette and opportunity had permitted

Do you want to give the whole ow?" Wilson is said to have asked.
"I hope to some day," Lulu is said to have answered.

The time to nearly do that came to her when she was put at the head of a company in "Dolly Varden." It was seen then that the forwardness which had been a vice when she was a help-mate with Wilson became a virtue when she was by herself at the front of an entertainment. Permitted to have her own wilful way, she developed a cash value which made managers fight in a lawsuit over the question who should have her this season.

Princess" has been peculiar too. Charles Major originated the story in his novel, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," and it was dramatized for Julia Marlowe, who used it thoroughly and was thought to have used it up. But whoever decided on the play for Lulu Glaser this season knew that she was capable of impersonating herself only, that she had done it captivatingly as the Dolly Varden in the musical parody of Wycherley's "The Country Girl" and that she could do it again as the Mary Tudor in a version of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" with fun and tunes in it. The problem looks easy now that it is solved successfully. Lulu is more exuberant than Ada Rehan was in the Wycherley comedy, more humorous than Julia Marlowe was in the Major drama and more clownish than either Ada or Julia could or cared to be. She is a hearty hoyden when in the petticoats of bluff King Hal's contrary sister Mary, a handsome swaggerer when she put son the doublet and boots of a knight to escape marriage with the old French monarch, and so complete a mistress of the tricks of a low comedian, a saucy soubrette and a gracious prima donna that the com-pany gets along first rate with none of those costly components, except as all three are embodied in Lulu her own confident self.

A play that has reversed the ordinary process and made a year's tour

You can never forget the Flavor, Tree Tea has been the Popular Flavor for Years and Years.

RTHUR WING PINERO is the Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," from book of that name and "Lovely y," the two stories being twisted Mary." Frenchmen, while the Americans are fact is that as a stage character Mrs caricatures of the bridegroom and the bride, the drunken Wiggins and the lugubrious Miss Hazey. Mrs. Wiggs' homely sayings, which were so relished by readers of the narrative, are disregarded by audiences, and so as a comedy the piece comes to naught; but every word and move of the wildly farcical couple is laughed at. Broadway doesn't take kindly to rural plays, but seems to accept this one.

Denman Thompson introduced at Tony Pastor's vaudeville theatre, which was then in Broadway, a sketch called "Joshua Whitcomb." That was the basis of the "Old Homestead," but it contained none of the country scenes of that comedy, being confined to Uncle Josh's experiences in Gotham-hi that his purpose is dishonorable and ready responses to alarms of fire, his that she can be nothing better with encounters with bunco swindlers in the his chambers, and, although ashamed and grieved, makes herself at home by letting down her hair, putting home. into his slippers and curling up cosily on his sofa. At that juncture Nevil gets the news that his sister, yielding at last to the family proclivity, has run away from her husband with a Broadway until this week. It began with a long season in this city, but off the main thoroughfare at a slightly undergrade theatre, and none of its many visits has until now brought it into a central house. Therefore many of our people are seeing it for the first time. Thompson has given to it a new and good outfit of scenery and engaged four members of the original company. The rialto has often heard that, whenever he gets tired of his role, he hires Archie Boyd as a substitute and audiences don't suspect the difference. In the current performance Thompson is as painstaking and spon taneous as ever. Not a line does speak as if he had ever spoken it h fore and his air of quietly relishing hi own humor is unimpaired.

> Broadway's disposition to disdain during successes as "Shore Acres" and "'Way Down East" had seant prosrural plays is so strong that such enperity in that nifty, snifty thorough fare in their original runs, they have returned often to money in the by-streets, and in all the years of the life of "In Old Kentucky" it has never yet been in Broadway theatre. "The County Chairman," with its representation of rustic politics and the promising start made by "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" indicate that our more pretentious folks are deigning to appreciate native Americanism

The scent of sentiment and the stench of onions are mixed in a love episode of "The Spellbinder," one of the three new farces that have failed here within as many weeks. Indeed and surely there is no delicate develop ment of American humor to consider it this play-rather may it be classed a strong delicatessen, like limburger and sauer kraut—but I am under agree-ment to describe all that is new and strange in the Broadway theatres. The first raise of the curtain shows a clerk n a law office eating a luncheon composed mostly of onions. He concealed them when the lawyer comes in, but their smell betrays them; and the clerk to palliate his offense, says that an onion is a sure cure for just such hoarseness as his employer, the spell-

The lawyer swallows the remedy in a large dose, recovers his voice, and immediately uses it to declare his love for the girl of his heart. He puts his face fondly close to hers, she seems to invite a kiss, and then he blows the very essence of his onionated eloquence right into the middle of her romance She recoils as with sudden pain, and he thinks it is ardor, not odor, that she doesn't like. So he stops short of the avowal which she is eager to hear, and she, deeming him perfidious, drags herself heartbroken hence, leaving him to slump into a chair and weep in an guish. That scene is acted with the utmost gravity, to plaintive music, and of course is meant for burlesque. Naturally, the audience is apt to sniff at those onions, rather than smile.

Regard for the gallantry of the authors of "The Spellbinder" makes me try to believe that the heartiest laughter raised by their play is accidental. The process of making "A Madcap A bride elect goes to a manicure shop to be beautified. An admirable but very ugly young actress has that role, and when she asks to have her face steamed the audience is actually hilari-She makes extensive purchases claimed. ous. She makes extensive purchases of toilet articles, and among them are fhree boxes of rouge and a rabbit's foot to apply it with. The clerk shows several sizes, and when she says, "I'l take the largest" the laughter is rude again. People have begun to feel for the actress, and to restrain their jol-lity, when the manicurist tries to sell her a rubber mask to beautify her face. She buys it, and rubber gloves, too, all to be worn at night to improve her complexion. At that the man who is to marry her protests. A kind friend suggests that, with a wife who dons such things on retiring, a husband would be justifiable in going to bed in boxing gloves and a baseball catcher's mask.

It is not clear whether Herbert Hall Winslow and Charles Dickson meant after all, to write a straight farce. The uncertainty is increased by some melo-dramatic twists. Thus, after an emotional passage with a woman in deep distress, culminating in the wrongful arrest of a virtuous young man, how can I be sure how the authors would have the audience regard the last ten minutes of their play? The hero, a candidate for state senator, and the villain, the boss of the campaign, have fallen out over a woman. The validity of the spellbinder's election is to be decided by the legislature. A German member, whose vote will break the tie goes out to see his boss, who will tell him to oppose the candidate.

What simpler, therefore, than that our resourceful politician should put on a yellow wig, beard and goggles, walk with a limp, speak in a German dialect and vote in place of the absentee? Probably he carries a make-up for such emergencies. Anyway, Dickson has the German dialect and a good one. Thus disguised, the 'cutely deceptive cuss traps the boss into signing the promise of a hotel license to a dis reputable saloon and thus has him in his pow-wow-er. The German returns, ees his double, becomes enraged and i the confusion casts his vote for the spellbinder. Our hero pulls off his wig and beard, sneers at the foiled villain, and, for a final picture for the curtain to fall on, accepts the senatorship with his right hand and pats his promised You see, he hasn' been eating onions this time.

WEBER COUNTY'S FRUIT

Season's Output Will Net Orchardists $150,000 With Best of Conditions.

Weber county is just in the midst of the value of the fruit crop for this sea son at $150,000. This represents only the fruit shipped outside or canned at the factories, and to it should be added large amount consumed at home. North Ogden is sending out an aver-age of about five carloads each day One Ogden dealer in box material is handling an average of a carload of boxes a day. Friday morning he had 30,000 fruit boxes in stock, and by 4 o'clock was completely sold out. The canneries have put up four times the amount of fruit this sea-son that they did last. Buyers from Minnesota and the Dakotas, as well as from the Chicago markets, are right on the ground paying cash for fruit, whereas in other years the orchardist had to ship his fruit to the markets and trust to luck and the honesty of ommission men to get his money for

These are some of the facts that are observed in the fruit sections. A very careful estimate made by one of the best posted fruit men of the county estimates the output this season to b 200 cars of the value of at least $500 per car. The fruit handled by the canning factories will raise the total value of the county's crop for outside markets $150,000 Peaches form about half the crop. Plums, apples and pears are also sent out in considerable quanti-ties, though the pear crop has fallen off heavily, owing to the blight. The fact that young orchards planted a few years ago are just coming into bearing is perhaps the greatest factor in the big yield of this season

DISCUSS WATER RATES

sen the Charge to City and Public.

A conference was held last night in the office of the mayor between Councilmen Nye and Craig, representing the city council, and Thomas D. Dee, H. H. Spencer, E. M. Allison and Charles H. Kircher, representing the water company, for the purpose of obtaining mutual concessions for the citizens and the water company. It is understood that the question of a new schedule of rates involving reductions in charges to both the city and private consumers was under discusand private consumers was under discus sion. Also on the other hand concession to the water company in the matter of franchises for the extension of water mains and the like. The result of the negotiations was not made public.

VALE MAILLARD.

His Case Against Chief of Police Browning Ends in 'Frisco. The case of A. Maillard against T. E. Browning, chief of police, for damages in the sum of $5,000 for alleged unjust imprisonment on a charge of vagrancy, was brought to a timely end yesterday morning when Judge Rolapp granted a motion for nonsuit. Oddly enough, this granting of the motion was not relished by the defendant and his attorney, who had a lot of evidence touching the immoral nature of the plaintiff's occupation, which they want-ed to have come out. Attorney Truman sought to spring a sensation i the case by charging that the chief of police had conversed with one of the jurors about the case after adjournment Friday night. Both the juror and the chief denied the charge, and Judge Rolapp also had taken judicial notice that the jurers and Browning had not

CHARGED WITH BEING ACCESSORY IN MURDER

Cleveland, O., Sept. 17 .- Jesse Deggs, a colored whitewasher, was arrested tonight and charged with being an accessory in the murder of Inez Smith whose body was found in a trunk in th river a few days ago. Deggs admits having taken a trunk from the dock of a steamboat landing to the lake. His companion, it is claimed, was Samue Smith, husband of the dead woman Deggs professes to have not known the contents of the trunk. Deggs was one of several people who lived in the house where Inez Smith is believed to have been killed.

Samuel Smith, the husband of Inez, has not yet been apprehended, although the police of St. Louis, to which city he is said to have gone, are looking for
